Post Storm Damage: Scam Alert

After severe storms caused extensive damage in the tri-county area Friday night, authorities and consumer advocates are warning homeowners to be on guard against unscrupulous roofing and contracting firms, who can be quick to collect insurance payments but then do little, if any, work.

Despite increasing public awareness and the best efforts of law enforcement, consumers nationwide continue to fall victim to unethical contractors. It is suggested that consumers protect themselves by researching any contracting business thoroughly before signing a contract.

Typical consumer complaints involve shoddy or incomplete work, lengthy delays, difficulty communicating with the company, an unwillingness to honor warranties and issues with billing.

Alarm bells should go off:

- * Anytime a homeowner is approached by a stranger claiming he or she can get your roof replaced for nothing or next to nothing.
- * Traveling salesmen who come knocking on your door immediately after a disaster
- * High-pressure sales tactics
- * Demands for up-front payments
- * Demands for an immediate decision
- * Advance-fee loans that "guarantee" a loan to rebuild your home or business

The following are some tips for consumers looking to hire a contractor to repair storm damage:

- * Before signing any agreement, check with your insurance company and read your policy carefully to determine the extent of your coverage. In many instances, your insurer already has relationships with well established, reputable companies.
- * Know who you are dealing with. Find out where the company is headquartered and how long it has been doing business in your community. Does the company have an established office in your area or simply a postal box? Watch for out-of-state phone numbers and license plates.

- * Find out whether the contractor is bonded and insured against accidents or issues with workmanship. Ask to see copies of this paperwork. If a company is soliciting business door-to-door, does it have a legitimate soliciting permit? If you are unsure, call your local government officials to find out.
- * Ask the company for references and call those property owners. Ask them whether the jobs were performed as agreed and if they were satisfied with the results.
- * Ask for a written contract and read it to ensure that everything mentioned by the salesperson is included. Make sure it includes all details of the work as well as when and how payments are to be made and when work will be completed.
- * Find out if there is a cancellation penalty if you terminate the contract before the work begins.
- * Beware of any company that suggests you do not have to pay your insurance deductible. Such a claim is illegal in many states.
- * Get more than one estimate. Obtain at least three bids for major repair work and check references. Be cautious if one of the bids is much lower than the others.
- * Do not pay the entire amount in advance. Hold back a portion of the payment until all work is completed to your satisfaction. In many instances, materials represent about one third of the total cost to the contractor. It is reasonable for the contractor to secure their interest in the materials upfront, but withholding payment beyond this puts you in a better position to ensure the work is completed properly and on time.

Anyone with information regarding possible scams should contact their local law enforcement agency: or Crime Stoppers at 255-1301, or at www.tricountycrimestoppers.org
